Market Comment

After a weak start that tested previous lows of the General Index just above 1,400 units, the market moved higher, defying the negative sentiment in international markets. The G.I. finally closed at +1.26%. Banks set the tone (+2%), along with small caps, while mid caps posted lighter gains (+0.6%). From large caps, PPC plunged (-8%) as it was the first day it traded ex-dividend, while all the other stocks (except two) gained ground. Turnover reached the usual levels for the last few weeks of €93mn, with Hellenic Petroleum's turnover exceeding €10 mn, which is quite high for the stock.

European markets had another serious slide yesterday, as growth and sovereign risk concerns remained top on the agenda. US markets recorded their eighth loss in nine sessions; nevertheless, stocks managed to recover some ground before closing. Sentiment was hit through a series of disappointing reports, such as initial jobless claims and ISM manufacturing index. Market participants are now primarily interested in today's official monthly payrolls report from the federal government.

European futures opened higher today. We expect the domestic market to remain characterised by thin turnover, while recent behaviour suggests an attempt to defend current compressed price levels.
